Abstract

Since 2016, our country has been actively promoting food and agricultural education, and has been completed related legislation by 2022. The Ministry of Agriculture, along with other government departments and civil organizations, is implementing the Food and Agricultural Education Law, which supports six major policies: recognizing local agriculture, fostering sustainable agriculture production and consumption, advancing food-related agriculture, preserving food culture, reducing food waste, and promoting balanced diets. To achieve these objectives, we've created the first phase of a food and agricultural education promotion plan as the primary direction for future education. This plan integrates government and private resources, strengthens national consensus and actions, establishes a recognition system for food and agricultural education professionals, and produces teaching materials for domestic agriculture, fisheries, and livestock to enhance our country's education system. We're actively promoting the idea of local production and consumption, encouraging people to support and consume local agricultural products while creating a friendly production and marketing environment. This contributes to food security and the development of sustainable agriculture. We're also focused on fostering a healthy eating environment, cultivating the concept of a balanced diet, reducing food waste, and promoting the practice of conserving food through resource recycling. To achieve these goals, we're developing education fields and promotion strategies that align with local characteristics. We continue to encourage activities and courses through farmers' and fishermen's associations, rural communities, and schools at all levels to popularize food and agricultural education and advance research and innovation. Food and agricultural education is vital for the sustainable development of our country's agriculture and improving food self-sufficiency. We're committed to integrating resources from central and local governments, establishing a foundation for a national food and agricultural education movement, and implementing the first phase of our promotion plan.
